

Our best Republican Journal Comes out for McClellan.

The Hon. E. C. Seaman, editor of the Ann Arbor Journal, who has for years been regarded the ablest political writer of the Republican party in Michigan, has this week taken the names of Lincoln and Johnson from the head of his editorial columns, and in their places introduced to his large circle of readers, George B. McClellan and George H. Pendleton as his candidates for the Presidency and Vice Presidency of the United States. It has caused a terrible fluttering in the Republican ranks, which is poorly disguised in their attempts to regard it with indifference. Mr. Seaman is one of the ripest political scholars in the Northwest, and will do vigorous service in the cause of the Union, and in increasing the majority which is to triumphantly proclaim the patriot soldier and statesman, George B. McClellan the next President of our country. After giving an historical account of the Chicago Convention, Mr. Seaman editorially remarks:

"Public sentiment, in favor of General McClellan, has been increasing in force very rapidly during the last thirty days, since the failure of General Grant's campaign in Virginia became evident, and President Lincoln announced his determination not to listen to any terms of peace, except on the condition that the Confederate States shall abandon slavery. A large majority of the people seem to be strongly impressed with the necessity of abandoning the abolition policy of President Lincoln—of falling back upon the Constitution as it is, as the only bond of union between the States, and of electing a military man of experience, wisdom, and regard for the Constitution; a man who is ardently devoted to the Union, and is capable of prosecuting the war successfully, and determined to restore the Union as it was.

"There were a few members of the Convention, comprising less than one-fifth part of the whole number, who were of the ultra peace stripe, and preferred peace to all other objects; who would make the attainment of a speedy peace the primary object of the government, and the restoration of the Union, by compromise, if possible, a secondary matter. Some of them would prefer peace, even at the sacrifice of the Union—as the ultra abolitionists desire the abolition of slavery, at the sacrifice of the Union. But those ultra men were in a minority, and gracefully yielded to the action, to the resolutions, and to the nomination of the majority. They will support the nomination of Gen. McClellan with zeal and energy; not as their first choice, but as their choice between him and Lincoln.

"The nomination of Gen. McClellan having been made by more than four-fifths of the Convention, and the resolutions adopted unanimously, the resolutions should be interrupted by the action and by the declared opinions of the nominee—and more particularly by the opinions expressed in his letter to President Lincoln, of July 7th, 1862—in which he sketched a system of general policy, which he deemed it advisable for the administration to adopt.

"Viewed in that light, we perceive at once that the first and primary object of the Convention in nominating General McClellan, was to aid in restoring the Union—and to have the war prosecuted for the sole purpose of putting down the rebellion and restoring the Union; and that their second object was to obtain peace as soon as practicable, consistently with that primary and more important object. There was no indication of an intent or wish, on the part of the friends of Gen. McClellan, to sacrifice the Union for the purpose of obtaining a speedy peace.

"Nearly the whole Democratic party of the Free States agree with the conservative Republicans, that slavery is a great moral and social evil; but since it has been abolished in the territories and in the District of Columbia, and an effective limit has been put to its further extension, they think it is no longer an alarming political evil. They regard the Federal Government, and the people of the free States as in no respects responsible for it in the States where it exists; and having no rightful control over it, their consciences are no more troubled by its existence in other States, than they are by the existence of serfdom in Austria or Russia, of slavery and Mahomedanism in Turkey, or of oppression in any other foreign country. Hence, they condemn the policy which tends to prolong the war, by converting it into a crusade against slavery.

"We have frequently expressed our dissent from the abolition policy of Mr. Lincoln, and many other measures of the Republican party, and did so in very strong terms in our issues of August 3d and 10th. When Mr. Lincoln, in June last, was nominated for re-election, we did not express any approval of the nomination; and though we put his name in our columns as the Republican candidate for the Presidency, we did so out of courtesy to our Republican readers—and never declared that we should support him. The failure of Gen. Grant's campaign in Virginia, since his nomination, and his letter addressed 'To whom it may concern,' making an abandonment of slavery by the Confederate States a condition of peace, show more clearly than ever before, the mischievous tendency of his policy, and that his re-election is not consistent with the restoration of Union, nor with the attainment of peace.

"Being well satisfied with the nomination of General McClellan, and with the resolutions constituting the platform adopted by the Democratic National Convention, we shall give our support to that ticket, and have taken from the head of our columns the names of Abraham Lincoln and Andrew Johnson, and substituted in their places the names of George B. McClellan and George H. Pendleton. We do this in the full and firm belief, that it is impossible to restore the Union, and to establish peace throughout the United States, under the emancipation policy adopted and persisted in by the present administration; and that it is necessary to change our rulers, with a view to a change of the policy of the government, that those most desirable and important objects may be attained."
